An Appeal for Lewer Taxes.

Whether or not this appeal will years ago, and everything else has adjusted itself to existing conditions except the administration of public affairs. Instead of our taxes being lower, as should be the case, they are continually getting higher and higher, and after most farmers pay their taxes, guano and lien bills, they have nothing left. We are honestly of the opinion that the State government could be administered at less outlay of money than it is now costing us, and not be one whit less effective than it is now carried on. Take the salary of one office, for instance, at say two thousand dollars. Adjustit to present conditions as to how much each dollar of that salary will now secure of the comforts of life as compared to the time when such salary was fixed, and we find that an amount equal to one-fourth less than such a salary will obtain as much to-day. But when cutting down salaries is talked about one is always particular that his views in support of such a reform should be construed as referring to the salary of somebody else. We are aware that this is an old question and that it has been kicked about in legislative halls until it is all out of shape. There are big salaries and little salaries, and some officers of the government do not get salary enough. A readjustment is needed. It seems these days that office holders are our masters in this republican form of government, when they really should be the servants of the people.

We must not be understood to be in favor of "three-for-quarter" statesmen. What we want is lower taxes, what the peeple want is lower taxes, there we find this year that the wealth of the State has made an appreciable increase and the amount of taxable property has been on the increase year after year for the past decade, yet still there is no relief for the taxpayer. In fact our taxes are higher now in proportion than they were in the inflated days of carpetbag misrule. There eught to be some relief afforded the principle that the affairs of our government should be administered with the stricest economy and

Rev. H. M. Allen was re-elected at Shiloh last Saturday for the coming year, "or in fact until he sees fit to resign." The rule of annual elections was abolished by the Church, and the pastor elected indefinitely. The old rule and "one which there is no Scripture for" has a tendency to form claus, wire pullers and place hunters and we think is a curse to any Church and will ultimately result in its ruin. The preacher that can't come in on his own merits had better conclude that something else is his calling.

"The Bible Institute" will meet three times with Shiloh next year, the first time in April, two days each meeting. It will be presided over by Revs. Earle, Allen, Barton, and Col. J. B. Patrick, which insures an intellectual treat to all who attend.

Wheat sowing is progressing very well and a good area will be put in. Oats are up and growing nicely, and sowing still continues. Corn has been gathered, and we think the majority of our farmers have made enough for home consumption. Potatoes have turned out well; and turnip patches can't be excelled.

Some changing of locations is going on and others will follow. An old observer says that a bad crop year is always followed by moving and marrying almost to an unlimited extent. From indications we think we can send you an account of a dozen more or less, before the holidays are over.

The health of our immediate neighborhood is very good.

— The probate judge of Barnwell

Perrin.

The probate judge of Barnwell county has been puzzled for some days as to who should administer on the estate of Joseph Coker, a negro of considerable means, who died several days ago. Coker had married three times—once before the war and twice since. All his wives are living, but they had all deserted him and at the time of his death he was living alone and had no children. The difficulty was solved by the estate being entrused to a sister of the deceased, whose rights as next of kin and heir at law were fixed by an act of 1865.
